

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A method of one embodiment of the invention is disclosed that determines a property of air within an image-forming device based on a measured change in air temperature within the device, the power supplied to a heating element of the device, and an air flow generated by an air-moving device. One or more parameters of the image-forming device are adjusted, based on the air density determined.